It was not possible to go to him often because there was something in his shoes that was beyond the temporary. It would not be wrong to say that durability was stitched into them. I cannot forget that day on which I had to say to him, "Zarin Gul Kaka, my last pair of shoes makes a creaking sound, you know". He looked at me with strange looks as if expecting me to withdraw the statement and then said, "It shouldn't have creaked". "It shouldn't have creaked". "It did, I am afraid", I said with quivering tone.

Questions:

- i. What was the complaint of the author regarding the shoes?
ii. What was Zarin Gul expecting from the author?
iii. What is meant by quivering tone?
